The Radcliffe club were never more kinkly and are working hard to perfect a line up that will better our New Hampshire visitors some.

Next Monday will be a gala day for the ball cranks. Manager Leith will enter two games at the Fair Grounds and they will be the real thing too. Radcliffe will butt against that strong team so well known throughout the State as "The Pilgrims," who have not met defeat this season but conquered everything in sight.

Those wishing to see the real base ball right off the live wire should attend without fail. Uncle Bill's club will be forced to lumber up if they put these worthy opponents out of business.

Radcliffe will appear with each position taken by a fast ball hander who can take care of any business which may be transacted in their particular department. If the weather man will only pass over the county desirable goods.

HER NAME'S SHADOW.

By ESTHER SANGBORN.

Copyrighted, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.

If she had not been named Beryl perhaps Miss Stanhope would not have thought herself so hopelessly plain, so thoroughly and utterly unattractive. But that name—so beautiful, so poetic, al sounding like an utterance in one short burning word of a womanly beauty almost divine—was as a curse to her.

It made her morbid. She shivered lest people learn it and smile at the incongruity.

Superconscious of her angles, her lack of color and dark circled eyes, reflected in every shop window, Beryl wondered why she had been named so incongruously. She almost cried when a wizened old woman with a parchment skin, in charge of a fruit stand, answered to the name of Violet.

What would she, Beryl Stanhope, be like twenty-five years hence?

She could not free herself from the tormenting thought. In old age, with ugliness intensified, she must still bear the musical Beryl applied to her, a name designed for a round, milk skinned creature, with hair like corn silk and eyes the color of a calm sea, the cool, restful blue that is more nearly green.

She was reasoning to silence her ever renewed womanly hunger for beauty of person when she tapped at the studio shared by her brother and Lindley Wood. Her brother was out, but Wood was painting feverishly, a seldom seen exultation on his serious face.

"Come in, Miss Stanhope," he called brightly. "Dick will be back in a jiffy. We are both making hay while the sun shines this week. Miss Cuyler is kindly posing for us, and she leaves the city Monday."

Beryl had not glanced at the model throne, but at this she turned quickly and caught her breath with a little gasp. A girl with the sheen of corn silk in her hair and eyes like a lapis lazuli sea was silhouetted against a background of pale green plush.

A sharp pain that Beryl did not know was evoked to her heart as she drank in the sumptuous coloring of the nonchalant beauty. Recovering her composure with an effort, she returned Miss Cuyler's greeting and stepped forward.

"Are you and Dick working on one theme, Mr. Wood?" she asked. "May I see?"

"Not one theme," answered Wood. "Dick is doing an Andromache, by mine is only a study, an ideal head. I'll be very glad of your criticism, Miss Stanhope. My work fails to satisfy me."

Lindley Wood's pictures usually received praise from his friend's sister, but for once there were no exclamatory remarks. After a long look she drew back a step with heightened color.

"Wherefore the name?" she asked haughtily.

"Beryl?" said Wood unconcernedly, touching up the round white throat on his canvas. "That is just a fancy of mine. Haven't you names to fit your ideal types? I would not think of painting a blond Judith or a dark Rosemond. I've always had a liking for the name of Beryl—with boyish eagerness—and Miss Cuyler happens to look my conception of it. Do you like the pose?"

"Very much," she replied, thankful she could say so honestly. But there was a strange infection in her voice, despite her effort. Lindley Wood's keen ear caught it, and he responded with swift artistic intuition.

"You see something wrong with it," he exclaimed. "I want to know what it is! Be frank, and tell me why you do not like my Beryl."

The living Beryl trembled foolishly as she buttoned her coat. "Seek to please the institute committee, not me," she laughed. "My opinion is not worth that doleful expression, Mr. Wood. Tell Dick I shall expect him early." And, with a nod that included the model, she left the room.

Over their tête-à-tête dinner that night Beryl tried to question her brother about Lindley Wood's interest in Miss Cuyler. But she could not. Her brother had been strangely preoccupied of late, and table conversation was monosyllabic.

"Wood hasn't been here for some time," he remarked suddenly, and Beryl, surprised in her thoughts, was glad that the doorbell spared her a reply. When Dick returned his friend's name was not mentioned.

Beryl sat reading in the little parlor when her brother went out. "Go, my dear," he said evasively. When the door closed behind him she dropped her book and assumed ease.

Pacing up and down the rooms, she assured herself that she would go to work at something presently and forget the episode. But, try as she would, her heart was filled with bitterness that her brother's friend—her friend, too, she had once thought—should have been so heartless, so utterly contemptuous of her as to paint an ideal Beryl. "He could not have told me my shortcomings more brutally in plain words," whispered she passionately.

Then, seeing something white on the hall rug, she stooped and picked up a card. "Edith Cuyler," she read—her brother's Andromache and Lindley Wood's Beryl! In that moment she felt almost as if she hated both artists and their model.

A chaos of thoughts danced through her brain, but through it all she always saw the pink and white face that had smiled from Wood's canvas above her name.

Unable to stay indoors, she put on her wraps and went out, but even the clear ozone of the winter's night did not arouse her from the strange thrall put upon her by the card.

She turned into the block where some friends, the Stones, lived, but she had no intention of going in, for she knew that Edith Cuyler was staying there. Suddenly a pillar of flame shot from a building ahead. In a moment the street was a confusion of hoarse shouts and screams. Beryl stood still and watched the residents, like a stream of human ants, carrying valuables to safety. Then, as one awakening from a troubled dream recognizes the environment, she realized she was looking at the Stones' house and that it was afire!

Attracted by a shrill scream, she raised her eyes to the third floor. The beautiful Miss Cuyler stood in a window, her blond head silhouetted against a curtain of fire.

Beryl was conscious of a commotion in the crowd. Then a man in evening dress followed his way to the burning structure and went up the ladder with eager steps. At the second floor a couple of flames lit his features, and Beryl clutched at his arm with horror as she recognized her brother Dick.

The next five minutes were each a fearful, anguish laden century to the watching girl. At any instant the walls might collapse and engulf them both.

She saw the cameo-like face, pearl white against that red curtain, bright with hope as she recognized the coming hero. Beryl saw Dick lift her from the narrow ledge and begin the perilous downward journey with her arms around his neck.

They reached the second floor in safety, though the ladder swayed as steadily. Willing hands held her as well as inexperienced people could, but danger threatened every step. Forgetting that she stood among strangers, Beryl clutched some one near. "I can't look!" she cried despairingly. "Oh, if they should fall!"

"Why, Miss Stanhope," answered an amazed, familiar voice, "why are you here?"

She clung to Lindley Wood with a little sob of relief. "Tell me," she begged pitifully.

By the necromancy of intuition he understood. "They are safe," he said, tucking her hand under his arm. "Let me take you home. You are icy cold. Dick is all right," reassuringly.

"If Dick and Miss Cuyler were not already engaged, would you be now?" he went on. "How can I manage, I wonder, to make myself appear equally heroic to you, Miss Stanhope?"

"Why?" in a gentle whisper.

"Because I love you," drawing her into the shadow of a building away from the crowd. "I was coming to say it, but it is easier to say it here under the stars than it would be in your lighted rooms. I can better endure your 'No' if you cannot see its effect."

"Your ideal Beryl is a cameo blond," she reminded. "I am plain!"

"What has my ideal Beryl to do with you?" he interrupted, looking his surprise.

"My name is Beryl," she answered.

"Did you know?" he cried emphatically, and instantly the memory of his words in the studio stood before him in letters of flame and he saw their significance.

"Tom always calls you Sis and—and I believed your initial represented Barbara. A blond Beryl may be my ideal on canvas, but the woman I love and would call wife has eyes like deep, dark velvets. Don't draw away, dear Miss Cuyler, is only a model to me."

He paused a moment, as she did not speak. "Perhaps there is some one else," he said sadly. "I dare not hope that you can care for me."

The hand on his arm tightened gently. "There is no one else," she said softly. "I love you. I love you."

Satisfied I will never again complain or envy my—future sister—her beauty."

"Why should you?" cried he, pressing her to his heart. "Beauty of soul shines from your every lineament, my queen and wife, and—don't you know that you are a true type of dark beauty, anyway?"

Too Long.

An old lady of his flock once called upon Dr. Gill with a grievance. The doctor's neckhands were too long for her ideas of ministerial humility, and after long harangue on the sin of pride she intimated that she had brought a pair of scissors with her and would be pleased if her dear pastor would permit her to cut them down to her notions of propriety.

The doctor not only listened patiently, but handed over the offending white bands to be operated upon. When she had cut them to her satisfaction and returned the bibs, it was the doctor's turn.

"Now," said he, "you must do me a good turn also."

"Yes, that I will, doctor. What can I do?"

"Well, you have something about you which is a deal too long and which causes me no end of trouble, and I should like to see it shorter."

"Indeed, dear sir, I will not hesitate. What is it? Here are the scissors. Use them as you please."

"Come, then," said the sturdy divine, "good sister, put out your tongue."

OXFORD.

Pomona at Oxford.

Pomona was entertained Tuesday, June 29th, by Oxford grange. The meeting was held in Robinson hall and dinner was served in S. of T. hall. At close of the business meeting a class of 22 was initiated into the mysteries of the Pomona degree.

The welcome words, dinner is ready, brought all to their feet. The tables were quickly filled and after a short prayer by the chaplain, each one set to with a regular grange appetite. The tables were filled the second time and altogether about 175 enjoyed the harvest dinner, and there was food enough for many more.

After a short recess the crowd adjourned to Robinson hall and the following program was carried out.

Recitation by Master Fred Russ. Prof. Hitchens, State Ethnologist, gave an interesting talk in regard to the care of orchards and raising better fruit. Prof. Hitchens explained that the giving of many prizes by the State and Pomona granges was done to stimulate members of subordinate granges to make a greater effort to improve their orchards and raise better fruit.

Prof. Hitchens spoke of the different kinds of fungi and insects that infest trees and plants and gave a formula to use as an exterminator. I repeat the formula as it is an excellent remedy to kill lice upon plants. Dissolve in one quart hot water enough hard soap to make a good lather, heat solution until it boils, then remove from stove and add two quarts kerosene oil and churn to a creamy emulsion. Keep in a closed receptacle, and when you wish to spray use one part of the stock solution to ten parts water, spray upon under side of leaves.

He also warned farmers to be careful of their tools in grafting as they were liable to carry material from a diseased tree to a sound one. Also to burn all the dead wood out from fruit trees. Prof. Hitchens advised thinning clusters of apples if one wishes to raise premium fruit.

The doctor stated that the tuberculosis is the most destructive disease that affects animals, and late years had discouraged breeding. Dr. Russell spoke of the two ways to get rid of a diseased herd. Either have them killed and burned disinfect, and purchase sound tested animals or have two barns and keep diseased animals by themselves, and bring up their progeny on sterilized food, and gradually get a clean herd.

The doctor stated that the tuberculosis test was almost sure to show reaction in tuberculosis, and did no harm even to a healthy animal. The doctor also stated that all cattle must be tested in order to be eligible to premiums at the fairs this year. Dr. Russell's talk was very interesting, and the only trouble about it was, that it was too short.

Oxford will have an old-fashioned Fourth of July celebration. There will be a parade of horribles at 2 p. m. The day will be given up to healthy amusements of all kinds. The Value of Trees.

In riding along the road in different directions, one regrets to see in many cases a slaughter of shade trees being carried on. The excuse offered for the wanton destruction is that the growing trees interfere with the growing of shade. Too often the real reason, we fancy, is that the soil is begrudged the trees, and they are sacrificed in order that the cultivated fields may be increased by a small percentage of their area. Now, the farmer who strips his road frontage of trees in order to increase his thrift in dollars and cents, is certainly not acting in conformity to his highest civic obligations.

When he attacks a tree which Nature has been years fostering and growing to maturity in order that it may beautify and enrich the locality where it stands, he is violating one of the ordinances of good citizenship. To sweep off shade trees from the roadside, and make barrenness where there should be beauty and attraction, is certainly an offence against the public.

The statute may give the public as regards a highway no further control over it than is incident to its use and maintenance for the purpose of travel, but it has a moral claim upon those who own the land subject to this easement to preserve objects of beauty and attractiveness.

Those who use the highways have two rights which should be recognized, primarily, to roads as good and passable as it is practicable to maintain them, and secondarily, to roads unimpaired by needless or wanton destruction of their natural beauty.

Trees are the chief element of roadside beauty of scenery. They are restful, refreshing and attractive, both by their position and in their grace of figure and beauty of foliage.

To lay waste a single rod which Nature has thus enriched is a public damage. To carry out such policy generally throughout a country or State would be a wholesale vandalism. Imagine Maine's highways stripped of trees, and you imagine beauty and charm in endless variety converted into desolation.

In other sections of the State, trees, both in village streets and along rural highways, have the dignity of local institutions, and are as secure against willful harm as would be a church, a schoolhouse or a cemetery, for almost equally with either of these they minister to the moral needs of the public and in all their associations and influences are good and wholesome. If farmers yield to greed so far as to lay waste their highways of growing trees, the farm area may be made that much larger, but the gain in farm production will be bought at a sad cost in the reaction it will have on the finer sensibilities of its people and the loss in the gain total of beauty of scenery, and ready value of the farm when a purchaser wishes to buy it for a home.

TUMOR OF FOUR YEARS GROWTH

Removed by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindley, Ind. — "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removed a four years' growth, which three of the best physicians declared I had. They said that only an operation could help me. I am very glad that I followed a friend's advice and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it has made me a strong and well woman, and I shall recommend it as long as I live." — Mrs. MAY FRY, Lindley, Ind.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy — tumor. If you have mysterious pain, irregular menstruation, or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation, but try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and such unquestionable testimony as the above proves the value of this famous remedy, and should give confidence and hope to every sick woman.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

What Shall We Do With Our Daughters.

Bring them up in the way they should go.

Give them a good substantial common education.

Teach them how to darn stockings and sew on buttons.

Teach them how to make shirts.

Teach them how to make bread.

Teach them all the mysteries of the kitchen, the dining-room and the parlor.

Teach them that a dollar is only one hundred cents.

Teach them that the more one lives within their income the more they will save.

Teach them that the more one lives beyond their income the nearer they get to the poor house.

—and do it like a Queen.

Teach them to wear thick, warm shoes.

Teach them to do marketing for the family.

Teach them to foot up store bills.

Teach them to make their own image, and that no amount of tight lacing will improve the model.

Teach them self-reliance.

Teach them that a good, steady, greasy mechanic without a cent is worth a dozen oily pated loafers in broadcloth.

Teach them to have nothing to do with intemperance and dissolute young men.

Teach them to trim and rasy romp is worth fifty delicate consumptions.

Teach them to foot up store bills.

Teach them to make their own image, and that no amount of tight lacing will improve the model.

Teach them self-reliance.

Teach them that a good, steady, greasy mechanic without a cent is worth a dozen oily pated loafers in broadcloth.

Teach them to have nothing to do with intemperance and dissolute young men.

Jersey Cattle Meet.

At the invitation of C. E. Richardson of Canton Point, some 50 people interested in breeding Jersey cattle met at his farm Wednesday, June 23 for the purpose of organizing the Androscoggin Valley Jersey Cattle Association.

State Dairy Inspector Merrill presented the advantages of co-operation in breeding dairy animals showing the results obtained in the western states. He outlined the plan of the State Department for carrying on the work, saying that the Department would furnish speakers for the special meetings furnish all blanks necessary for the work, send reports of each meeting to the press of the state and render any assistance that may be desired.

The Commissioner of the Office of Agriculture will print a summary of the work done by the Association in its annual report. When an organization of breeders was asked for it was unanimously voted to organize an association.

Arthur J. Foster, Canton Point, was elected president of the association and A. H. Adams, Canton Point, secretary. The following vice presidents were elected: P. A. L. Stanwood, Rumford; C. E. Richardson, Canton; W. E. Bump, (Morey Farm), Mechanic Falls; B. D. Packard, Peru; P. O. Barker, Hartford; A. S. Robinson, Sumner; F. E. Adams, Livermore. P. C. Barker was elected treasurer and J. P. Bunker and Fred Adams executive committee.

Membership in the association is limited to breeders living in the following towns, Buckfield, Canton, Dixfield, East Livermore, Hartford, Hebron, Jay, Livermore, Mexico, Mechanic Falls, Peru, Rumford, Sumner, Turner, Wilton and such others as the association may see fit to add from time to time.

The next meeting will be held Oct. 27 at the home of some member. The place will be announced later.

A picnic dinner was eaten on the lawn in front of the house, after which Prof. P. A. Campbell, University of Maine, spoke on Cattle Breeding and its Problems.

Among the different phases covered was the value of pure bred sires on grade herds; the good performance of high grade cows; the keeping of sires when value has been demonstrated; use of breeding rack for heavy bulls; loaning or leasing of animals (males) among members of association; care to be used in inbreeding, and also in introduction of new (or untired) blood, and the mistake of using grade bulls.

The lecture was followed by a demonstration of the use of the score card and by comparative judging.

The Sort of Hat to Wear.

It is very seldom that more than one hat can be taken on a week-end jaunt. Even if a trunk is sent on ahead it is apt to be a steamer trunk, incapable of accommodating one of the monstrous chapeaux of the moment: for, notwithstanding all this talk about smaller headgear succeeding the time-worn "Merry Widow," the hats of this summer with their violently turned up brims and huge bandbox-like crowns, make hats of a few seasons back look like thinbills.

Therefore, as a rather dressy hat must go along, it will have to travel perforce on its wearer's head. Over it should be draped a veil to protect it and partly to prevent the fellow travellers from misjudging one's good taste by its rather dressy character. The veil used should match the travelling coat and present a harmonious and neat appearance, as should the so arranged on the hat that it may be pushed up to allow its wearer to read on the train, or pulled over the face to protect hair and eyes from dust should a window be open.

There is a clever contrivance which makes it possible to go away over the week-end with one's gay parasol, leaving the homely umbrella at home. This contrivance is a delightful little "rain-coat" for one's hat.

It is made of the softest rubberized silk, in attractive colors, and when hooked all around the hat brim shrinks by means of drawstrings into a soft tam crown and alaskan bow effect that is very graceful. When this hat-water-proof is adjusted not a drop of rain or a speck of dust can touch the perishable flowers, feathers or other hat trimmings.

Back to the Farm.

City Men Are Now Buying Land to Cultivate.

The city man is deserting his old haunts for the farm. From the store, the factory, there comes the demands for lands in the open country.

The immigration and colonization departments of the railroads interested in setting up the great Southwest prove this assertion. Each one of the last 12 months has brought an increased number of inquiries from the commercial and industrial centers of the United States.

Where formerly more than 90 per cent of the inquiries regarding land came from the village post offices and the rural free delivery routes, now nearly one-third are from men in the larger cities.

Seekers after the cause of this growing tide of emigration from the hands and bustle of city life to the restful repose of the farm find several reasons assigned. Perhaps the one thing most prominent before those seeking the new mode of life is the assertion, which has come from several investigators of labor conditions, that more than 90 per cent of the inhabitants of the largest cities are just three months from starvation.

To make clearer this last statement such reports say that nine out of ten men living in the larger commercial and industrial centers would be ready for the bread line within three months if they should lose their positions, and be unable to obtain new ones. Statistics show that this nine out of every ten man would exhaust his savings within 30 days after losing their positions, that they would exhaust their borrowing power within another 30 days and that still another month would place them face to face with absolute starvation or in the beggar class.

Doubtless the publication of findings like these caused thousands of city men to take an inventory. The bank clerk looked things squarely in the face and found that conditions fitted his case, and he wanted to know where he could turn and make himself more secure. The bookkeeper and the clerk in the store found that they were living from hand to mouth, as the saying goes, and they could see no bright ray of hope in case of discharge. The factory man had to admit that he was in the category referred to. Where was his secure resting place?

About the time when these sad stories began to circulate there came the rift in the clouds that showed the silver lining. The farmer—he who had been struggling under a mortgage on the home place—was becoming the envy of all his fellows. His acres were yielding bountifully and he was getting big prices for his products. He was paying off the mortgage and fast creating bank accounts. He seemed to be on "easy street."

Kansas—poor, "bleeding Kansas"—was just about to forget what mortgages meant. They used to have them in great piles out there, but the stacks were dwindling to nothing. The panic in 1907 showed some things about Kansas and her neighboring states. It proved the fact that they could furnish the necessary money to run the nation's business if the Eastern men couldn't. The farmer's money came to the front.

Such disclosures helped to answer the city man's question: "Where can I find a place that will make the later years of life easy?" He needed only to know where he could get a farm at low enough price and on easy enough terms to make it possible for him to join the ranks of the producers from the soil. As is indicated by the reports referred to few city men have enough to go very far in the line of real estate buying.

Railroad systems that run through thickly settled sections of the country wanted all the land coupled for that meant the creation of more traffic. Hence they advertised extensively the opportunities awaiting the man who would become a pioneer in these comparatively new spots. They showed that land could be had all the way from the cost of filling on a government homestead to $25 an acre. That didn't sound so very big, even to the city chap without much savings. Surely he could make both ends meet and pay for it.

The fact that land could be bought so cheaply was a revelation to most of the city men. Near their home places, they knew, the acre price usually was several times that asked in the new regions. They began to figure cost and return and the movement began. Hundreds decided they could make both ends meet until the new home was paid for, and then they could pile up something for a rainy day. Their experiences have tended to stiffen the backbone of the weaker ones, and now the tide is growing greater every day.

Not all of the city men were attracted by the cheaper lands. Irrigated lands that sell for $50 to $150 an acre have proved the greater magnet to many. This is accounted for in several ways. Foremost is the fact they give quick returns. On some of these lands that are practically in tropical climates products of the soil grow every month in the year.

A buyer may begin to get money very soon after he makes his first payment. The ease with which one year's crops will pay for a tract in such a region appeals strongly to the city man. Seeing vegetables and fruits growing in mid-winter recalls to his mind what the grocer back home was willing to charge him for such things at that time of year. He can remember, with little effort, that it was a princely price—one that he could not afford to pay. Immediately he makes up his mind that now is the time to even up the score.

Greater than the merits of any one section, however, is the strong conviction in the heart of the city man that the farm is the only sure road to independence for him. He realizes that even in the lean years the farm will yield up practically every article of food that is required. He can get through without going into debt. The chickens and cows will bring in enough income to pay for the staples that do not grow on the farm. The lean year passes without really leaving a scar. The worst it can do is to hold back the bank account a little.

How much better this looks than the idle year in the city! When there is lack of employment every bit of income stops. There is no land yielding up the things needed for the table; there are no chickens and cows to help meet the expenses. The savings dwindle to nothing in a little while. These comparisons are the things that have caused the helter-skelter of the city man.

On the first of July a new law went into effect, which requires all dealers in milk and cream to register with the commissioner of agriculture. The commissioner has sent out letters of instruction, so there need be no mistake.

A Forgotten Centennial.

Even the watchful W. C. T. U. seems to have overlooked or neglected the fact that this is the hundredth anniversary of the birth of the temperance movement in America.

Such is the solemn fact. In 1809, the first temperance organization was born, and a little corner of the state of New York was the humble Bethlehem. And a humble, modest little camel—it was that thrust its weak and diminutive nose into the tent of the nation's bibulous hilarity!

"Total Abstinence!" It never dreamed of such heresy. It simply pledged itself not to get drunk, "except on the Fourth of July and other legal holidays" and promised to pay the sum of 25 cents to the general treasury every time it transgressed this self-imposed obligation.

To be sure 25 cents loomed larger upon the financial horizon than it does to-day. The amount then seemed modest to us was sufficiently important to our grandfather to give an added tinge of bitterness to the "dark, brown taste," following the debauch not devoted to the interests of patriotism.

And these strenuous temperance fanatics were subjected, we are told to many annoyances from their bibulous neighbors, among which the burning of barns and the hamstringing of cattle were prominent features. One can scarcely understand this expression of public indignation.

Legal holidays were not so plentiful as they are today. There were only three or four yearly in the state of New York. And however liberal might be the interpretation concerning the normal limits of a single saturation, nobody could fairly claim that a season of hilarity lasting from Christmas till Fourth of July could be classified as a single day. Therefore the periods of drought must have been painfully protracted.

In 1812 the Methodist church took a radical step. It forbade any of its preachers to sell intoxicating liquor. The devout Methodist of that day would have been lost in amazement if he could have looked forward a hundred years and witnessed the spectacle of his splendid church with its multitude of devoted preachers pledged to the principle of total abstinence.

Worshipers have been the triumphs of the temperance reform in a single century. If we may trust the testimony of Wendell Phillips, fifty years ago three-fourths of the farms in Massachusetts were sold to pay rum debts. Doctors refused to treat their patients; lawyers were drunk in the Supreme Court of the United States; statesmen were drunk in the halls of Congress. A mighty change has come over the face of the nation. The habitual drunkard has sunk in the social scale, and our American workmen are the soberest in the world.

Our great temperance organizations should celebrate this centennial year of the great reform with general rejoicing, for never has any other social reform since the beginning of the Christian era achieved such splendid victories in so short a time.

BRYANT'S POND.

John Perry.

John Perry died June 25th, of bright disease, at the home of S. J. Thompson in this place, where he has been cared for since his illness, aged 79 years and 23 days.

Mr. Perry was born in South Paris, lived there till seventeen years of age when he went to Boston to seek employment. He was employed by the Boston & Maine trucking firm, at the end of this time the firm presented him with a valuable team and he started in business for himself.

His love for his work together with careful management enabled him to make a success and in course of time he established a wholesale trucking business, which he followed for many years and realized large profits, often working from twenty to forty acres.

For many years he lived on Broadway, South Boston, and although childless himself, many homeless children found in his home not only food and shelter, but a luxurious home and a liberal education, as his love for children was such that his heart went out in sympathy to any needy child.

Some fifteen years ago he moved to Brunswick and settled on a farm, but did not find farm work so much to his liking, and found the financial side far more satisfying than his former business had been.

Some months ago he came to visit relatives and was taken sick and failed gradually, till he became helpless for some weeks before his death.

He leaves a wife who resides in Brunswick, a twin sister, Mrs. Rachel Edwards, of South Woodstock. The pure love and tender devotion which existed between the aged twins was indeed beautiful and the aged sister has the sympathy of many friends in her great sorrow and feeble health.

He also leaves two nephews, Ed and Will Andrews of this town, who have looked after his interest and welfare at the close of his life as only sons could have done.

His kind straightforward nature won for him friends where ever he went and it can be truly said of him, that he had no enemies.

Prayer service was held at the house June 26th, in charge of the undertaker Andrews. Rev. Mr. McKensie officiated. The remains were taken to South Woodstock for burial.

Elsie Wade Jackson spent Sunday here with her mother and attended Pythian services.

School in the Whitman district, taught by Lucy V. Frost of Norway, closed Friday, June 18th. Those not absent one day were: Lloyd A. Hathaway and Raeburn B. Hathaway.

Two ball games on the J. V. I. S. grounds in the afternoon, a dance at Grange hall and a show at the Opera house in the evening made things lively here Saturday. The ball games proved interesting. The first between the Bryant Pond second and Greenwood was won by the former 11-6. The best game was between the first teams of Bryant Pond and South Paris and proved one of the best of the season. It was finally won by Bryant Pond, score 8 to 7. The South Paris boys put up a fine game and have every reason to feel proud of the showing made.
